Why?

Balfour Beatty Investments is seeking to demolish the existing Scottish Law Commission building at 140 Causewayside and develop purpose-built student accommodation (PBSA) on the site.

You can visit our website by scanning the below, which will contain exhibition material from 9am on Thursday 15th June.

Background

Balfour Beatty Investments, owned by Balfour Beatty plc, is looking to bring forward high-quality student homes on the site of the Scottish Law Commission building, 140 Causewayside.

Providing a mix of studio and cluster apartments, this development will serve to address a well-documented increasing demand in the capital, ensuring that students are occupying purpose-built student accommodation (PBSA) rather than other homes in the city more appropriate for families.

The site at Causewayside, on the A700, is a suitable location for PBSA in terms of access to higher education facilities, active travel and public transport services.

This exciting proposal will regenerate the current site and is being brought forward by a developer who has an exceptional record in the city, including the delivery of an award-winning postgraduate student scheme at Holyrood for the University of Edinburgh.

Consultation

Two consultation events on the proposals will be held, the first taking place on Thursday 15th June and the second on Thursday 27th July, updating the exhibition material from the first event. Both will take place at Mayfield Salisbury Church between 4pm and 7.30pm.

Exhibition boards outlining the development will be available to view, and there will be the opportunity to provide feedback, with the development team available to answer any questions you might have.

Exhibition material, detailing the proposed development, will be available to view on the website from 9am on Thursday 15th June.
